SUPERINTENDENT'S ANNUAL REPORT

September 14, 1943

Board of Education
Plainfield, New Jersey

Gentlemen:

There is submitted herewith the Annual Report of the Board of Education for the school year 1942-1943.

An analysis of the enrollment statistics shows that the elementary average enrollment decreased 65 and the high school 114. On October 1 the high school enrollment was 1845, but by the end of the year it had gone down to 1641, the war being the chief factor in the decrease. Enlistment of boys in the war services and draft induction of those in the senior class did not prevent their receiving high school diplomas because of a New Jersey State Law granting certificates of graduation to those who were rated as seniors at the beginning of the year.

War conditions had their greatest effect in the school system at the high school level because of the age of the pupils and because of the nearness of the boys to the induction age. On the initiative of the War Department and the U. S. Office of Education a plan of high school participation and training called the Victory Corps was adopted and executed with a fine degree of efficiency by Principal Waldro J. Kindig and his staff. A brief outline of the activities is listed below for the record.

A Community Advisory Committee was formed early in the year. This committee consisted of school authorities, members of the Board of Education, representatives from a comprehensive list of community, civic and social agencies of the city. A Victory Corps Council, made up of the principal, teachers and representatives from the four classes in the high school functioned for the school.

Classes were instituted and conducted for specific pre-induction training in:

- Fundamentals of Radio
- Fundamentals of Auto Mechanics
- Fundamentals of Electricity
- Fundamentals of Machines

A Physical Fitness program was required of Junior and Senior boys. The purpose of this course was to harden physically the boys for the training which they would receive in the armed forces. Some practice in military drill was furnished by officers supplied from Camp Kilmer.

A general membership was open to participation by the entire student body. In the general membership group a large number of students qualified by submitting evidence that they were actively engaged in community services forwarding the war effort.

It should be noted that emphasis on cultural subjects has not been lessened by the efforts of school to aid in the war. Rather, our attention has been definitely fixed on giving greater value to such subjects as literature, art, music and social studies, with the conviction that education in these fields is of the greatest importance in preparing students to live lives of the fullest happiness and understanding.

The war has brought about a great increase in the marriage and birth rates. An increasing number of fine young children will soon be entering our schools with the eager hope of their parents that they will be educated to meet the unknown conditions which future years bring. I am not alone in my belief that some agencies which worked during the years of depression will accentuate their pressure further to limit educational opportunities of the children and that they will use the costs of war with more force than ever before as an excuse for their position.

Parents of these children have employed the best medical services available within their incomes for their children and have used the most modern systems of feeding and health precautions. They should be just as watchful of the educational conditions surrounding their children and see to it that, whatever the future economic conditions of the country, the children and the youth are not made to suffer for those deplorable political judgments of the last twenty years which were the sure causes of the war.

The facts are that our whole pattern of education of the past has proved its worth in the amazing job this country has done in organizing management and labor into a machine which has created the materials of war at a most efficient speed. There is every evidence that the youth of the country, under the Selective Service Act, have responded intelligently and quickly to the specialized training for all types of combat services. It is apparent that the whole national system of education — public, private, and collegiate — can assume a large amount of credit for our war efficiency. Education to produce these results has cost money. I think no one can defend the thesis that it has cost too much money. The annual cost of all educational services in the country, previous to Pearl Harbor, is woefully small in relation to what the citizens have been willing to spend in one year for war.

But in the field of political action, there are grounds for the possible indictment of the educational forces in the last twenty years in that they failed lamentably in preparing for wise political decisions in the national and international scene. Muddled thinking and partisan politics in all fields of national endeavor prevailed until the sneak attack by Japan. Even now, as we face the perilous postwar years, there is serious necessity that the trained intelligence of all educated citizens be fully exercised in its influence on the elected representatives in government; otherwise, we can accept the fact that the mistakes of the past will be repeated as they have been repeated and repeated in the years of history.

We as a nation need to adopt a forward constructive attitude toward education. Leadership must develop which will demand that education be improved instead of being allowed to deteriorate by action of the minority sections of our public.

It is encouraging to note that there is considerable indication of a change to constructive thinking in support of higher educational standards. In support of this, I cite the statements of Sir William Henry Beveridge, Under Secretary of the Ministry of Labor, and the National Association of Manufacturers, as well as the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

Beveridge, in a recent release concerning plans for extending educational opportunities in England, stated that there is no escape of the fact that a modern complex society demands from its very nature that large sums of money must be spent in preparing the population to make this society function.

New presidents of two great organizations of business and industry, The National Association of Manufacturers and the United States Chamber of Commerce, have brought about marked developments in changing the viewpoints of their organizations toward the economic, social, and governmental changes which have come about as a necessary concomitant of the changes and problems of the times. Their attitude toward government and social changes are most encouraging. Their position on public education is definitely expressed in a resolution of the National Manufacturers Association printed below and following it an extract from a pamphlet of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, entitled, "Business and Education and Imperative Partnership".

RESOLUTIONS OF THE N.A.M.

"The National Association of Manufacturers has passed two resolutions of great significance to education. This action should encourage school people everywhere. Following a conference on November 11 between the NEA Commission on the Defense of Democracy through Education and the NAM Committee on Educational Cooperation, the NAM at its convention in New York City on December 5, 1941 unanimously adopted the following resolutions:

Education

Whereas, the essence of a system of popular self-government is the ability of the electorate to deal intelligently with the public issues submitted to it for decision, and to select those who are to represent it in public affairs with wisdom and sound judgment, and

Whereas, the National Association of Manufacturers consistently has believed that this requires a system of public education which will enable the citizen of our republic to receive the education which will enable him to make his maximum contribution to society and which society can afford to provide, and

Whereas, the increasing devotion of public funds to national defense purposes will and should require governmental economy in other directions and may presage inadequate consideration of our educational needs and financial requirements,

Be it Resolved, that the administration and conduct of public education is an essential public service: that its reasonable financial support constitutes a necessary claim upon our American society to which other public services of lesser value should be subordinated."

EXCERPT FROM "BUSINESS AND EDUCATION AN IMPERATIVE PARTNERSHIP"

Partnership Achievements

"This program calls for the implementation of the democratic ideal of the full self-expression of the capacity of every individual citizens. It calls for the role of state as servant to the individual as its master. It looks toward the implementation of freedom in expression, in security, in absence of want, and fear. The attainment of the social ideals and economic opportunities that the boys in the Army, Navy, and Air Corps expect to find on their return from the wars will be far nearer achievement if they can be grounded in such economic opportunity and stability. Such can be the case if education and business form a partnership to effect such an achievement.

The question presents itself in the challenge we examined at the outset: Will and can education develop a modernized program of practical training in skills to add onto its conventional role of classist teacher? Will and can education do an even better job in teaching use of the fundamental classic academic skills? Will that vision extend to adult, to returning soldier and sailor, to rising youth? Will it make education that magic catalytic instrument with which an adequate economy can be developed? If so, then we can economically support the social progress we all seek to achieve.

Can business conceivably fail in the challenge to convert an unwelcomed assessment into a profitable investment? For this program holds within itself the potential salvation of private endeavor, of capitalism if you please, and promises the necessary impetus for an expanding cycle of our economy reaching beyond anything we have yet experienced.

If education and business will together explore these possibilities, we may find an opportunity to meet the increased cost of education's essential contribution to the fuller expansion of our economy, such cost to be borne by business as an eagerly sought investment. Business would welcome the opportunity to work with education to this end."

In spite of the conditions which wars always impose on the profession of public education, it is a pleasure to report that the school system has had an excellent year. Perhaps the challenge and threats of the results of war have tried the metal of all of us and made us more eager to achieve.

That we have done so well is due to the willing services of all Board of Education employees. This achievement would not have been possible without the forward looking and intelligent support of the members of the Board of Education.

The coming year, as well as the succeeding years, will continue their challenges and it will need the best efforts, intelligence, judgment and courage to fulfill our obligations to each of our assigned duties in the public schools.

Respectfully submitted,

F. W. COOK

AUDITOR'S CERTIFICATE

We have audited the accounts of the Board of Education for the City of Plainfield, New Jersey, for the year ended June 30, 1943. We have reviewed the system of internal control and, without making a detailed audit of the transactions, have examined or tested accounting records and other supporting evidence, by methods and to the extent that we deemed appropriate. Our examination was made in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards applicable in the circumstances and included all procedures which we considered necessary.

In our opinion, the foregoing statement of budgeted and non-budgeted funds available as at June 30, 1943, are correctly presented in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles applied on a basis consistent with that of the preceding year.
